When you stop to read the side panels on most dog food packages, it makes you wonder: what exactly do they mean by "poultry"?

And if you're really brave, you might even try to imagine what a "poultry-by-product" might be. Well, as far as the law is concerned, if your dog's food lists these ingredients, you could be feeding him anything from duck beaks to quail's feet. Plus anything else in between. Like heads, undeveloped eggs, intestines—maybe even a few feathers.

And if that disturbs you, you should be feeding your dog a Nutro Max product. Because at Nutro, we'd never think of cutting corners by putting "poultry" or "poultry-by-products" in Nutro Max. Our major protein source is always chicken meal, made with the same fresh, chemically free chicken pieces you'd serve your family. With the water and fat removed. Which assures that your dog gets a wholesome bowl every time he eats. And because the ingredients in Nutro Max are consistent, so is the nutrition it provides.

So before you buy your dog another package with mystery meat, compare the ingredients with those in Nutro Max, and you'll come to a logical conclusion. Everything else is for the birds.
